

Construction sector in Belarus 2009

Development forecasts for 2009-2011

Publication date: June 2009

Language: English

Word from the author:

The Belarusian construction sector seems to be the last untapped construction market in Europe – and a growing market, at that. Between 2004 and 2008, the value of construction output in Belarus increased by nearly 20% each year, and – despite the deteriorating worldwide outlook in construction and in the overall global economy – the real growth rate remained above 20% in the first four months of 2009. This is one of the steepest increases in construction reported worldwide. Growth was also maintained in residential construction and is expected to continue throughout 2009.

Robert Obetkon, Senior Construction Analyst

About this report:

Construction sector in Belarus 2009, Development forecasts for 2009-2011 describes and analyses the construction sector in Belarus as a comprehensive entity, and then deals with three major market segments – engineering, non-residential and residential construction. It also supplies solid forecasts for each segment to 2011, and provides detailed profiles of major construction companies, equipping professionals with the vital information required to successfully navigate the market during uncertain economic times.

PMR has chosen to produce a report focused on construction in Belarus because:

- Client correspondence indicates that our readers want new and complete information on this high-potential market.
- Changing economic conditions warrant updates on the current and future market outlooks.
- There is an overall lack of comprehensive information on this market available to business development professionals – and we seek to fill the void.

As an added bonus, Construction sector in Belarus 2009, Development forecasts for 2009-2011 gives you an inside look at the market's major players via detailed profiles of major regional and international companies.
